

...of the ...
...the ...
...the ...

...of the ...
...the ...
...the ...

...of the ...
...the ...
...the ...

...of the ...
...the ...
...the ...

The purpose of reader and independent study courses is to provide students with the opportunity to explore a topic of interest in greater depth than is possible in a traditional classroom setting. These courses are designed to be self-paced and self-directed, with the student taking responsibility for their own learning. The purpose of these courses is to provide students with the opportunity to explore a topic of interest in greater depth than is possible in a traditional classroom setting. These courses are designed to be self-paced and self-directed, with the student taking responsibility for their own learning.

Readers: These study experiences replicate the student's experience in a traditional classroom setting. The student will be required to read the assigned text and complete the assigned assignments. The student will be required to read the assigned text and complete the assigned assignments.

ing definitions.

the applicable term) to an alternative course to their schedule should the reader or independent study course be desired.

When a student is enrolled in a reader or independent study course, no tuition will be charged.

Faculty members are encouraged to advise students to take the reader or independent study course if they are interested in the topic.

Students who are interested in this option can be placed by the Dean.

Response to course cancellations.